CHAPTER 4: PROJECT DESCRIPTION

4.1 Introduction

This report documents the completion of Kartik Raj Singh's internship as a Project Intern in the Fundraising Team at Yatharth Sangam Foundation. The official Certificate of Completion records that the tenure began on 1 June 2026 and ended on 30 June 2026.

The certificate is numbered IC/25/2680 and is dated 14 August 2026.

The internship provided exposure to the working environment of a nonprofit organization. Fundraising is an important organizational function because it connects social purpose with public participation and resource mobilization. It also requires responsible communication, organized follow-up, accurate documentation, and respect for the privacy and dignity of stakeholders.

The purpose of this report is to present a structured account of the internship, explain the relevance of the fundraising function, identify the learning areas associated with the role, and preserve the certificate as documentary proof of completion. The report does not claim numerical fundraising results or beneficiary outcomes that are not stated on the certificate.

4.2 Organization Profile

Yatharth Sangam Foundation is the organization named as the host institution on the Certificate of Completion. The document confirms that the recipient served within its Fundraising Team. The certificate is signed by Harsh Raj, Founder, and Sujay Kumar, Co-Founder.

An NGO or foundation generally brings together a social mission, program activities, volunteers, supporters, and administrative systems. Within this environment, fundraising supports the continuity of organizational work. It may involve communicating the purpose of a project, identifying potential supporters, maintaining relationships, coordinating outreach, acknowledging contributions, and preparing records for internal review. The organization profile available for this report is limited to the information visible on the certificate. Accordingly, this report does not add unsupported claims about the foundation's registration, geographical reach, beneficiary population, program budget, or specific social-sector activities. Such information may be inserted in a future version if an official organization profile is supplied.

4.3 Problem Statement

Nonprofit organizations must communicate their purpose and mobilize support while maintaining accuracy, trust, and accountability. Fundraising activity can become difficult when information is scattered, follow-up responsibilities are unclear, communication is inconsistent, or records are not maintained systematically. These challenges can affect the efficiency of a team and the quality of its relationship with supporters.

The project context for this internship can therefore be stated as follows: how can a project intern contribute to a fundraising team through organized support, clear communication, responsible documentation, and timely coordination during a defined period of engagement?

This problem statement is intentionally framed as a functional and learning-oriented problem rather than as a claim about a particular failed system. The supplied certificate confirms the role and tenure, but it does not describe a specific campaign, software system, financial target, or operational deficiency. The report therefore focuses on the general contribution framework appropriate to the confirmed role.

A further reporting challenge is evidentiary. A completion certificate establishes that the tenure was completed, but it does not by itself establish the number of calls, messages, donors, rupees raised, beneficiaries reached, or hours worked. A credible internship report must distinguish certificate-confirmed information from reflective analysis and must identify where additional organizational records would be required.

4.4 Project Objectives

The objectives of the internship and this report are aligned with the confirmed role of Project Intern in the Fundraising Team. The first objective is to understand how fundraising supports the functioning of a nonprofit organization. The second is to develop professional habits related to communication, coordination, record maintenance, and deadline management.

The third objective is to interpret the internship as applied learning. This includes connecting academic discipline with practical teamwork, observing how tasks move through an organization, and reflecting on the responsibilities associated with representing an NGO to external stakeholders. The fourth objective is to prepare a formal completion record that accurately reflects the certificate and can support future academic or professional use.

The objectives do not include claiming a specific fundraising total or campaign impact. If verified activity data are later supplied by the foundation, they may be added as a separate outcomes section with appropriate dates, definitions, and supporting evidence.

4.5 Scope of the Project

The scope of the internship covered the period from 1 June 2026 to 30 June 2026 and the functional area identified on the certificate: the Fundraising Team. The scope of this report includes the role context, the possible workflow of fundraising support, learning and professional development, documentation requirements, and the formal completion evidence.

Within a fundraising team, a project intern may assist with preparing outreach content, organizing contact or activity information, researching prospective supporters or partners, tracking follow-ups, compiling updates, and supporting internal coordination. These are presented as possible contribution areas associated with the role, not as a fabricated list of completed tasks.

The report excludes confidential donor information, private contact details, payment information, beneficiary identities, internal credentials, and any unverified performance metrics. It also excludes claims about the foundation's programs that are not recorded in the supplied documentation. This boundary protects both the recipient and the organization.

The scope may be expanded if the following documents become available: a role description, supervisor evaluation, attendance record, activity log, project brief, sanitized work sample, or official communication confirming specific assignments. Any expansion should preserve the original certificate as the primary evidence of completion.

4.6 Technologies and Tools Used

The supplied certificate does not identify particular software, platforms, databases, or communication tools used during the internship. For that reason, this section describes the tool categories relevant to fundraising support rather than claiming specific applications.

Typical categories may include word-processing tools for drafting and proofreading, spreadsheets for activity tracking, email or messaging tools for communication, shared folders for document management, and presentation or design tools for outreach material. The appropriate tool depends on the organization's internal policy, access permissions, and data-protection requirements.

The most important principle is not the brand of software but the quality of use. Files should be named consistently, versions should be controlled, access should be limited to authorized users, and personal information should not be copied into unapproved systems. A project intern should also follow the instructions of the responsible supervisor before sending external communication or modifying an official record.

| Tool category | Possible use                                | Good practice                              |
|----------------------|----------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------|
| Word processing      | Drafting letters, emails, notes, and reports.      | Proofread names, dates, links, and tone.          |
| Spreadsheets         | Tracking contacts, actions, deadlines, and status. | Use controlled fields and protect sensitive data. |
| Shared storage       | Maintaining current files and team references.     | Follow naming, access, and version conventions.   |

|---------------------|-------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------|
| Communication tools | Coordinating with supervisors and stakeholders. | Use approved channels and document next steps. |

4.7 System Architecture

For the purpose of this report, the “system” is understood as the workflow through which a fundraising request or activity is prepared, communicated, followed up, documented, and reviewed. This is a process architecture rather than a claim that a particular technical system was implemented during the internship.

Mission / Project Need → Fundraising Message → Outreach → Follow-up → Documentation → Review and Learning

The first layer is purpose: the team must understand what it is supporting and why participation matters. The second layer is communication: information must be translated into a message that is clear, respectful, and accurate. The third layer is coordination: outreach and follow-up must be assigned and completed at suitable times. The fourth layer is documentation: actions and outcomes must be recorded so that the team can maintain continuity.

The final layer is review. A team can learn from questions received, response patterns, delays, incomplete records, and successful practices. A project intern can contribute to this architecture by keeping information organized, escalating uncertainty, and ensuring that assigned tasks are visible to the responsible team member.

4.8 Methodology

The methodology used for this report is documentary analysis combined with reflective interpretation. The primary source is the Certificate of Completion supplied by the recipient. Its observable facts were extracted first: name, role, team, organization, tenure, reference number, issue date, appreciation statement, and signatories.

The second step was contextual analysis. The confirmed role was placed within the general workflow of NGO fundraising. This allowed the report to describe likely learning domains without presenting general practice as a verified list of individual tasks. The third step was evidence classification, separating confirmed details, reasonable interpretation, and information that would require additional documentation. The fourth step was report preparation according to the supplied academic format. The report follows the requested sequence of cover page, candidate's declaration, acknowledgement, completion certificate, project description sections, and bibliography or references. It uses A4 page dimensions, wide left margin for binding, centered page numbering, Times-style serif typography, numbered tables and figure captions, and a distinction between preliminary pages and the main chapter.

| Phase | Activity                | Output                                       |
|-------|-------------------------|----------------------------------------------|
| 1     | Document review         | Certificate fact sheet                       |
| 2     | Role interpretation     | Fundraising workflow framework               |
| 3     | Evidence classification | Verified and unverified information boundary |
| 4     | Academic formatting     | Structured internship report                 |
| 5     | Quality review          | Page-count and visual checks                 |

Table 4.3: Report preparation methodology

The methodology emphasizes responsible reporting. In particular, it avoids creating unsupported claims about the foundation's social programs, the intern's quantitative performance, or the financial results of any fundraising activity. This is important because professional reports are evaluated not only for presentation but also for accuracy and traceability.

A future methodology for a more detailed project report could include interviews with the supervisor, review of approved work products, examination of activity logs, and comparison of planned and completed tasks. Such methods would require access to organizational records and permission to use the information.

4.9 Expected Outcomes

The expected outcomes of the internship include improved understanding of NGO operations, greater awareness of fundraising communication, and development of transferable professional skills. These skills include written communication, research, organization, follow-up, teamwork, time management, and attention to detail. An additional expected outcome is the ability to present a concise and accurate professional narrative. The recipient can state that he completed a Project Internship with the Fundraising Team of Yatharth Sangam Foundation from 1 June 2026 to 30 June 2026 and received a formal Certificate of Completion. This statement is supported directly by the supplied document.

The certificate's appreciation for valuable contribution indicates formal recognition by the foundation. However, a certificate does not provide a numerical impact assessment. If a future report includes outcomes such as funds raised, contacts reached, proposals prepared, or events supported, each figure should be backed by an official record and should identify the relevant period and measurement method.

4.10 Certificates of Completion and Other Communication Proof

The official Certificate of Completion is attached in this report after the preliminary pages. It records the following: Kartik Raj Singh completed his tenure as Project Intern in the Fundraising Team at Yatharth Sangam Foundation from 1 June 2026 to 30 June 2026. The reference number is IC/25/2680, the certificate date is 14 August 2026, and the signatories are Sujay Kumar, Co-Founder, and Harsh Raj, Founder. No separate internship appointment letter, supervisor evaluation, activity log, or completion email was supplied with the certificate. The report therefore does not reproduce or summarize such documents. If they are later provided, they may be attached as additional annexures, subject to organizational permission and removal of confidential information.

The certificate should remain the authoritative document for verification. This report provides academic context and reflection, but it does not replace the original certificate or alter any wording contained in it.

4.11 Indicative Work Plan

A defined internship period benefits from a simple work plan. The plan below is an indicative academic framework for understanding how a one-month fundraising internship may be organized. It is not presented as a record of the recipient's exact daily assignments because no activity log was supplied.

| Period | Focus area                       | Indicative learning or support activity                                                                |
|--------|----------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Week 1 | Orientation and context          | Understand the foundation's purpose, team expectations, communication rules, and approved records.     |
| Week 2 | Preparation and outreach support | Assist with organizing information, reviewing messages, and preparing assigned communication material. |
| Week 3 | Follow-up and documentation      | Track next steps, maintain orderly records, and communicate progress to the responsible team member.   |
| Week 4 | Review and handover              | Summarize learning, close assigned actions, and identify records or improvements for future work.      |

Table 4.4: Indicative internship work plan

The value of a work plan is that it makes expectations visible. At the beginning of an engagement, orientation reduces uncertainty. During the middle of the engagement, preparation and follow-up create continuity. At the end, review and handover reduce the risk that useful information remains only in the intern's personal notes.

A work plan should remain flexible because NGO priorities can change. A community need, an event, a donor response, or an urgent communication may require the team to revise its sequence of activities. Flexibility does not mean abandoning documentation; it means recording the change and ensuring that responsibilities remain clear.

4.12 Skills Mapping

The internship role can be mapped to a set of academic and professional competencies. This mapping helps the recipient explain what was learned without overstating the level of mastery or claiming a formal assessment that was not supplied.

| Competency     | Relevance to fundraising work                               | Evidence to collect in future               |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------|
| Communication         | Prepare clear, respectful, and audience-appropriate messages.      | Approved drafts, feedback, or supervisor comments. |
| Organization          | Maintain orderly tasks, files, deadlines, and follow-ups.          | Activity log or documented workflow.               |
| Research              | Understand project context and identify relevant information.      | Research notes or approved background brief.       |
| Teamwork              | Coordinate with supervisors, volunteers, and related functions.    | Meeting notes or team feedback.                    |
| Digital literacy      | Use approved tools for documents, spreadsheets, and communication. | Sanitized work sample or tool-based output.        |
| Professional judgment | Recognize uncertainty, confidentiality, and escalation needs.      | Reflection note or supervisor evaluation.          |

Table 4.5: Skills and evidence mapping

The strongest development often occurs when skills are combined. A spreadsheet is useful only when its fields are meaningful and updated accurately. A message is effective only when it is connected to a clear purpose and sent through an approved channel. Teamwork is strengthened when updates are concise and timely. The role therefore offers integrated learning rather than isolated technical practice.

4.13 Ethical Considerations in NGO Fundraising

Fundraising involves trust. Supporters expect an organization to communicate honestly about its work, use contributions responsibly, and respect the people connected to its programs. An intern may not make final decisions about these matters, but every intern can contribute to ethical practice by following approved language, asking questions when information is unclear, and avoiding unsupported claims.

Confidentiality is a practical responsibility. Contact information, donor preferences, payment details, beneficiary information, internal plans, and unpublished project material should be accessed only when required for an assigned task. Such information should not be copied to personal devices or shared through unapproved channels. A report intended for academic submission should contain only information that the organization has permitted the student to disclose.

Accuracy is equally important. A fundraising message should not promise a result that the organization cannot substantiate. Numerical statements should be checked for source, date, unit, and context. If an intern is uncertain about a figure or statement, the appropriate action is to pause and seek clarification rather than to guess.

Respectful representation matters because NGO communication often refers to communities or individuals who may be in vulnerable situations. Images, stories, and descriptions should preserve dignity and should be used only with appropriate permission. Even when an intern's task is administrative, the language used in records and messages can influence how an organization is perceived.

4.14 Challenges and Limitations

The principal limitation of this report is the limited source material. The supplied certificate confirms completion and identifies the role, team, organization, dates, reference number, issue date, and signatories. It does not provide a detailed work diary, campaign brief, supervisor evaluation, fundraising total, or list of deliverables.

Because of this limitation, the report uses a careful distinction between fact and interpretation. Statements that directly reproduce certificate details are documentary facts. Discussion of fundraising workflows, learning areas, and professional practices is contextual interpretation. Numerical outcomes and specific task claims are excluded unless they can be verified through additional records.

A second limitation is that the report does not independently evaluate the foundation's programs or organizational performance. The certificate establishes the host organization for the internship, but it is not an organizational profile or impact report. A future version should use official material if it needs to discuss registration, program geography, beneficiaries, funding sources, or institutional history.

A third limitation concerns the absence of a formal supervisor assessment. The certificate expresses appreciation for valuable contribution, which is meaningful recognition, but it does not provide a rubric-based rating of punctuality, quality, initiative, or teamwork. Those dimensions should be described only when supported by feedback or documented examples.

4.15 Recommendations for Future Internships

Future interns in fundraising teams may benefit from receiving a written role description at the beginning of the engagement. The description can state responsibilities, reporting lines, approved tools, confidentiality expectations, and the form in which progress should be reported. Clear expectations help the intern contribute sooner and help the supervisor provide specific feedback.

A lightweight activity log is also recommended. It can record the date, task, status, next action, and responsible person without storing unnecessary sensitive information. At the end of the internship, the log can support a completion summary and reduce the gap between a formal certificate and a detailed record of learning.

A short midpoint review can identify misunderstandings while there is still time to correct them. The review need not be lengthy. It can ask what has been completed, what is pending, what support is required, and what the intern has learned. A final review can then capture strengths and suggestions for continued development.

For the student, the most useful recommendation is to preserve a portfolio of permitted evidence. This may include sanitized drafts, reflections, process diagrams, or a supervisor-approved summary. The portfolio should never expose donor or beneficiary information and should always respect the foundation's ownership and privacy requirements.

4.16 Personal Reflection

The internship experience can be viewed as a transition from classroom learning to organizational responsibility. Academic work often permits a student to focus on a defined assignment. NGO work adds real stakeholders, changing priorities, limited resources, and the need to communicate across different levels of experience. This makes even a short tenure an opportunity to develop professional maturity.

The fundraising context also encourages a broader understanding of impact. A successful organization is not supported only by visible public events or large numerical results. It is supported by the quiet reliability of records, follow-ups, acknowledgments, and internal coordination. An intern can learn that careful work has value even when it is not publicly visible.

The certificate's appreciation for valuable contribution provides a positive point of closure. At the same time, the completion of an internship should lead to continuing questions: Which skills should be improved? Which areas of nonprofit work deserve deeper study? How can communication be made more inclusive? How can future work be documented more clearly? These questions turn a certificate into a foundation for lifelong learning.

A useful personal statement arising from the experience is that professional contribution depends on both intention and method. Commitment to a social cause is important, but it must be accompanied by accuracy, patience, accountability, and respect for the people represented by the organization. This lesson is applicable well beyond fundraising and can guide future academic projects and employment.

4.17 Conclusion of Project Description

The project internship at Yatharth Sangam Foundation is formally evidenced by the Certificate of Completion issued to Kartik Raj Singh. The document confirms that he completed his tenure as a Project Intern in the Fundraising Team from 1 June 2026 to 30 June 2026. It also records the reference number IC/25/2680, the issue date 14 August 2026, and the signatures of Sujay Kumar and Harsh Raj.

This expanded project description explains the relevance of the role while maintaining documentary discipline. It places fundraising within the operational context of an NGO, describes an indicative work plan, maps transferable skills, discusses ethical responsibilities, identifies limitations, and offers recommendations for future internships. It does not invent campaign outcomes or confidential details.

The internship therefore represents a completed period of professional learning and contribution. The certificate provides formal validation, while the report presents the academic interpretation required for submission. Together, they create a complete record that can support university evaluation, future applications, and continued development.
